PERFORMANCE UNDER FLAME EXPOSURE

Initial Flame Contact
(No Significant Reaction)

Extended Flame Exposure
(250°C)

Prolonged Flame Exposure
(250°C)

Prolonged Flame Exposure
(650°C)

This sequence illustrates the reaction of a flame-resistant coating when exposed to a flame over time. Initially, the coating is touched by the flame, leading to minimal visible change. As exposure continues, the coating begins to react and forms a protective char layer. With prolonged flame contact, the char layer thickens and provides insulation, demonstrating the coating's ability to resist and mitigate the effects of high-temperature exposure.
